Fragment of an ancient papyrus scroll with Coptic text. The text is written in a dark ink on a brown, fibrous material. It consists of several lines of script, with some characters in red ink (rubrics). The text is arranged in approximately 10 horizontal lines, with some characters appearing to be organized into columns or groups. The script is a form of Coptic, likely from the 4th to 6th centuries AD. The fragment is irregularly shaped with frayed edges.

Fragment of an ancient papyrus scroll with Coptic text in a single column. The text is written in a dark ink on a heavily aged, brownish-gold papyrus surface. The script is a form of Coptic, likely the Bohairic dialect, characterized by its distinctive symbols and the use of red ink for certain characters (rubrics). The text is arranged in approximately 10 horizontal lines, with some characters appearing to be organized into columns or groups within each line. The fragment is irregularly shaped, with frayed edges and some missing sections, particularly at the top and right sides. The overall appearance is that of a well-preserved but clearly ancient document.

Fragment of an ancient papyrus scroll with handwritten text in a cursive script, likely Coptic or Greek. The text is arranged in approximately 10 horizontal lines. The script is dark, possibly ink, and the parchment is aged and yellowed. Some characters are written in red ink, serving as initials or markers. The text is partially obscured by the irregular edges of the fragment.
